

ONLINE TODAY

Slowdown in organics

BLOGS

Business

The Red Line—two opposing views

Here in Baltimore, the Red Line is becoming more and more of a contentious issue. Donald C. Fry of the Greater Baltimore Committee is a strong supporter of it, saying that it will provide a boost for business. But lawmakers and homeowners in Canton are speaking out—the argument being that a surface line on the already bustling Boston St. would increase congestion.

Law

Venable cuts salaries across the board

It was only a matter of time. Everyone, possibly even up to equity partners, will see their numbers go down, effective July 11.

A growing number of farmers who went all-natural in the years when organic food sales were growing at a double-digit pace are giving up their organic certifications. Organic farming is costly and labor-intensive, and many consumers are no longer willing to pay the price in a recession.

Read online-only content

www.mddailyrecord.com

BEST OF THE BLOG

In his post "The King of Pop as peacemaker," Danny Jacobs writes:

With all of the various tributes to Michael

Jackson, I was reminded this morning of one of his more underappreciated roles: preventer of gang violence. I'm of course referring to his rad '80s music video to "Beat It," one of many hits from "Thriller."

MULTIMEDIA

To watch a video of Hopkins scientists and Baltimore entrepreneurs speed dating, visit the related Danielle Ulman story on our Web site and click on the embedded video.

MOST VIEWED

STORIES ON THE WEB

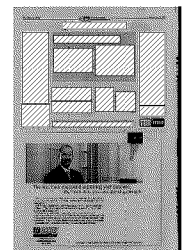

- 1 Red Line, Purple Line: A dash for the cash
- 2 Severstal seeks $20M for bridge crane collapse
- 3 Water taxi can't sue U.S. over fatal capsizing
- 4 Judge dismisses lawsuit against Ethiopian church board
- 5 Council panel cool to Uplands firms' return

Read complete stories at www.mddailyrecord.com

BECOME AN INSIDER

Do you want to be the first in your office or law firm to know the latest breaking news?

Sign up for our daily e-mail news blasts and know the latest before anyone else. Simply provide us your e-mail address, and we'll make sure you are on the inside of our news coverage.

Sign up today at
www.mddailyrecord.com

To read more, follow the link from our home page at www.mddailyrecord.com

Organic farmer Allen Moody works on his tractor on his farm in Westby, Wis.

